It is said, I King. 6.1. that the fourth year of Solomon was four hundred and sour secret from the children of Israels coming out of the land of Egrown or chairten or interest counting out of the least of the fight. Take from them the fourty years of Davids ceign, and the thirty before he began to reign; and there remains to the time of his birth, from hundred and ten. Now Rahab, who was wife to Salman, was an houle-keeper in that year wherein the children of Hard came out of the wildernefs year wherein the children or issue came out or the wiscenses, and Canasa, Joha. v. V. 14. He is the Lord our God 3 See chap. 13.2.

His judgements are in all the careh 3 He hath brought all fores of men under his power, and exercifeth his judgments every where. Or, the judgements which he executed on his enemies are made known throughout the whole world, Josh. 2. 9,10. Here are two reasons rendred, to enforce the former duries: one taken from his good respect to his people; the other from his judgements on transgressors.

V. 19. Be ve mindful almaies of his Covenant | Or, he hath remembred bis Covenant for ever, Pfalm. 105. 8. That which is here fet down, implyeth a duty on our part; and withall, the condition of that Covenant whereunto we are bound, Gen.17. 9. Deut. 29.9. That which is noted in the Pfalm, layeth down a fure ground of faith, which is Gods mindfulness of that Covenant of Grace, which he made with his people, Deut.7.

Here it implyeth, that we, in our generations fhould ferve God, and do what lyeth in as, that our pofterity, yea, all that come after us to the worlds end, flould alfo, in their generation, ferve him. In Pfalm. 105. S. It implyeth, that Gods Word, Promife and Covenant shall never fail; but according, to the condition thereof, be made good, throughout all generations, to the worlds end.

They who hold, that Joab and the other Captains did not well in obeying, alleady these reafons: First, it is unlawful to be accellary to a fin. Secondly, they did it against their conscience. Thirdly, they then-felves judged that some vengeance would follow thereupon. A general answer may be given to all these, that the act required of them, which was to number the people, was not famply finful. See v. r. The fin was in Davids mind, and in the end which David propounded to himself, to which Joab and the other Captains were not accellary. Neither can it be faid, that they finned against their conscience; for howfoever they might think that David did not well, in prefsing the thing to far as he did, yet in their conscience they might be perfuaded that they ought rather to obey their king in his refolute command, then fitr up his wrath, and incur his displeasure, by an utter refusal to do it. As for the vengeance that they might judge would follow upon it, they were not fure of it, but only feared that fuch a thing might fall out. If they obeyed the king meerly upon a flavish disposition, to do any thing, though it were finful, upon their So-versigns command, questionless, they finned. Josb finned,

For reconciling these differences, it is said, that there were eleven hundred thouland men numbred by the feveral rulers that went into feweral tribes; but because the matter seemed abominable to Joab, v. 6. he was not careful to put all into the publique records of the King; he only put down eight hundred thous records of the King 3 he only put down eight hundred thou-fund. This Joan might do 3 partly through pation 3, and partly because he had intelligence of the beginning of the plague, which made him leave off before he had finished all. See chap. 27.24. But the Pen-man of the Chronicles, find-ing other records, put the cotal sim together in his lacred history. Others answer, that the tulers numbered all the males, whether they were fit for war, or no, which amountlight in this thing. By this it appears, that David was lome-ed to eleven hundred thousand, and that Joab registred what tickled in his mund, with an high conceit of the multinor but vallantmen, which were but eight hundred thou-fand. But it is £ld, that the eleven hundred thou-fand. But it is £ld, that the eleven hundred thousand were men that drew (foord; and in that relighet, fit for war. 16 as this answer will not well reconcile the case.) The shekel contained two bekah's, Exod 38.36. For beliah, fignifieth half a shekel. A bekah weighed an hundred and threefcore barley corns; a shekel, three hundred and twenty, which answereth to our half ounce of troy weight; in worth, two shillings and fix pence. A talent containeth three thousand thekels, which may be collected from Exod. 28, 25, 26, where fix hundred thousand, and three thousand, and five hundred and fifty men, are taxed by the poll, at fo many bekah's, or half shekels; a bekah for a man; which are half so many shekels, namely, three hundred thousand, and one thousand, and seven hundred threescore and fifteen. Put three thousand and leven hundred threeteore and htreen, but three thousand hekels to one talent, and the fum there mentioned, will thence arife, namely, an hundred talents, and a thousand seven hundred threescore and fifteen shekels. Thus it appears, that three thousand shekels made a talent. A shekel then being half an ounce, three thousand shekels produce three hundred feventy and five pound flerling, at five shillings per ounce in filver, which is the value of a talent in filver. The Hebrews valued gold ten for one of filver, that from the age of twenty years and upward] Of other tribes, all that went forth unto the war, were numbred from twenty years old and upward; but Levites were not in the time of the law, admitted into the house of God, till they were at least five and twenty. See v.3. Indeed we read, that under the law the number of them was taken from a moneth old and upwards, Numb.3.15. But this was only to know how many there were of that tribe, and to confectate them to Gods fer-vice. It may be that David, guided by Gods Spirit, faw caufe to admit them into the house of God at twenty years old, because the fervices of Levites required not so great strength when the Temple was built, as they did when the Tabernacle, and all the holy things belonging thereto, were to be carried upon mens shoulders from place to place. See ch. 6. 31. Or, because now more were put into service, then in 31. Or, because nowmere were put into service, then in former times. David might ordain, that the Levites from twenty years old to five and twenty, should be admitted into the Temple, to behold the service of the Lord, and so to acquaint themselves the better therewith. And from five and twenty, to thirty, affift elder Levites in their fervices, and after thirry, to bear offices.

from the age of twenty years and upward] Of other tribes, all that went forth unto the war, were numbred from twenty years old and upward; but Levites were not in the time of the law, admitted into the house of God, till they were at least five and twenty. See v.3. Indeed we read, that under the law the number of them was taken from a moneth old and upwards, Numb.3.15. But this was only to know how many there were of that tribe, and to confectate them to Gods fervice. It may be that David, guided by Gods Spirit, faw cause to admit them into the house of God at twenty years old, because the services of Levites required not so great strength when the Temple was built, as they did when the Taberwhen the I couple was putit, as they due when the I apper-nacle, and all the holy things belonging thereto, were to be carried upon mens shoulders from place to place. See ch. 6. 31. Or, because now more were put into service, then in 31. Or, because nowmore were put into service, then in former times. David might ordain, that the Levices from twenty years old to five and twenty, should be admitted into the Temple, to behold the service of the Lord, and so to acquaint themselves the better the twith. and they made Selomon the for of Davidking the fecond time? This, questionics, hath relation unto 1 King, 1,38,39. For then was Solomon folemnly proclaimed to be king. In reference to that first time, this is filed, the second time, That first making of Solomon king, was on a fuddain, by reason of Adomatting or solemon sing, was on a tuddam, by reason of ran-nijahs confipiracy, and that to fupprefs that faction. Neither can it be thought, that they were affembled from all parts of fitted unto that folemnization, because it was so hastily done. Indeed all the people that were then in Jerusalem, and heard of what was done, gathered themselves together, and gave their acclamations, 1 King. i. 39,40, But at this follomity they were assembled from all the tribes of Israel, ch. 28, 1. Whether this fecond making of him king were in Davids dayes, is queftionable. They that take it to be in his time, gather their tionable. They that take it to be in his time, gather their conjecture from the words immediately going before, in this and the former verfes; and also from the mention of Davids death after this act, v.a.6. But because this solemnity of So-Jonons being king, was many wayes like to the other, efpeci-ally for the folumnity of facrifices and feaffing, it was not un-fit to joyn them together. #### CHAP. XX.

Verf. 1. It came to paffe after this alfo] From the beginning of this chapter, to verf. 21. is fer down a very great eleverance which God gave Jehothaphar from many and mighty enemies. The first clause of this chapter is a transfer tion from that which was noted in the former chapter, to that which follows in this. It may have a particular reference to the judgment denounced, ch. 19.2. and fo it giveth instance net puedinent actionities, en. 19.5. and to it given intrance of God winds tupon leicholiphait, in fufficing enemies to come and invade him; and alto of Gods respect to the good things that were found in him, (ch. 19.3.) by preferving and elivering him. In relation to that care of reformation which is noted of Jchoshaphat, (ch.19.4,&c.) it sheweth, that not-withstanding the good things which are found in Gods children, God luffereth them to be tryed; but fo, as their tryal Exra This is the Title of the Book following. It is called Ezra, by reason of the Pen-man thereof, whose name was Ezra. Ezra, according to the notation thereof, significat an belper. And he well anfwered his name; for he was a great helper of the Church of God: and that in a most feafonable time, when the Church was in great affliction. Of this man, see more, Ezra 7.1,6,&c. Sundry Books carry the name of the Pen-man thereof, as most of the Prophets. Besides, a great part of this Book containeth memorable of the gen-man thereon, as most of the prophets. Enthus, a great part of this Book consonned interface, and that from the beginning of the feventh chapter, to the end of the book. Smdry books have their name or title from fuch a ground. So Johna containeth the Acts of Johna; Judges, of Judges, Ruth, of Ruth : Nchemiah, of Nchemiah : Ezra is supposed to be the Pen-man of sundry other books of facred Seripture; as of the two books of Chronicles; (See the last note on the last verse of the second book of Chronicles,) of Nehemiah, (which by many is called the fecond book of i.zra, and of Malachi; for by reason of the time wherein that Prophecy was written, and of the matter contained therein, Malachi is supposed to be Ezra': for Malachi may be taken appellatively, for a Messenger.

The Title.

by twenty thousand drams; which is fix thousand two hundred the rest of the people gave two thousand pound of filver, which is fix thousand pound sterling. The sum of the filver see down in Nehemiah, is less then that in Ezra, by two thousand four of any fort, whether of Judah or Benjamin, or of any of the other tribes; or of any other nations that wished well unto them. (fee ch. 1.6.) But in Nehemiah there is fet down no more then was given by the governour, some of the chief famore then was given by the governous; tome or the enter in-thers, and the reft of the people, namely, of Judah and Ben-jamin. The sum therefore set down in Ezra, may well ex-ceed that which is set down in Nehemiah. Some take the contributions of gold, silver, and Priests garments, set down, Neh.7.70,71,72.to be at another time then those that are here fer down; namely, that thefe were at the Ifraelites first coming to lerufalem: but those in Nehemiah, after that good governour had come to Jerusalem, built up the walls of the City, and setled the State; so as there passed above an hundred and fifty years betwirt these two contributions. If they were so distinct, there is no need of bringing both to one equal fo diffinit, there is no need of bringing both to one equal fum. One may be greater then another, without any feem-ing contradiction in the flory. If the fums here given to-wards the building of the fecond Temple, be compared with that which was given, (1 Chr.22.14, & 29.4, 7,8.) towards the building of the fift Temple, we shall find those sums far to exceed these; namely, more then Talents exceed Drams: Yet in regard of the mind of his people, this gife was in Gods account as great; for these gave after their ability, (v.69.) as the poor widow, who cast in two mites in the treasury, Luk. 21.1,2. Though the gifts in gold and filver fet down by Ezra, exceed those which are set down in Nehemiah . Yet the gift of Priests garments (mentioned Neh. 7.70,72.) exceed in number those which are fet down in Ezra. In Ezra are fet down only me hundred; but in Nehemiah, five hundred and thirty Priefts garments, you and threeffore and feven more. In all, five hundred twenty and feven. It is probable that when they came to Jerufalem, they observed more Priests then they thought would have come: And thereupon, the piety of many moved them much to increase the number of Priests garments. In Neh. 7. 70. mention is made of fifty bafins; thereof is no mention made here in Ezra; for they were before mentioned,ch. 1. 10, and that more then fifty, if we joyn bafins of gold and filver together.

This is here thus set down, to shew, that they came to the house of God at such times as there were folemn meetings; but at other times followed their own callings, in the proper places of their abode. It is added, Neh. 7, 73. that when the feventh moneth came, the children of Ifrael were in their cities. ## The Argument of the Book of Nebemiah.

I'M, this Book, the comismance of Gods mercy towards the fews, after their captionity, is fee down; and thus the railing up a third informment of procuring their good. The fiel, the McCarlbabel. The feeond, Exa. The third, this Nehemish. Of the difficult good which each of these differ the of genera on Exa. This Nehemish continued in Perlia, of or the view reserves of the fews to fewallelm: One under Zecubbabel, Exa. 2.2 The other, under Erras, Err. 8. 1,8cc. He was a great officer under Arranetics King of Persia; and much favoured by him, chap. 2. 1,6. He used that authority and favour to the best advantage, that he could, for the Church of God. Mention is made of two returns of his, from Perlia to Jerusalem. One was in the twentieth year of Artanernes, chap. 2. 1: and that was for twelve years, thap. 5. 14. In that time, First, he built up the walls of Jerusalem, chap. 3. 1, &c. and 6. 1. Secondly, he setled the Common-wealth, and therein redreffed many grievances, chap. 5.1, &c. Thirdly, He joyned with Ezza in reforming Religion, chap. 8, 1, &c. And for the better establishing thereof, brought the people to renew their Covenant with God, chap. 10.1; &c.
The other return of Nohemiah to Jerulalem, was within a year after he came to Petlia: For in the same jear A monor return of Michigan to Jerusaian, was within a few sizes of ease to return 1 or white fame, few that be came back to Attackers, King of Petila, he obtained leave togo again to Jerusalen; which was the two and thirty year of Attackerse, chap, 13, 6, 7. And it is supposed, that he torised there at the second return, for long at the Petina Monarchy continued, which might be about story two or for my three fortils. So as the whole time of his boing at Jegusalem, from first to last was about fifey five years. His first coming to Jegusalem, was thirseen years after Exta's first coming thither: For Exta came in the seventh year of Attaxetxes, Ext. 7.8, But Nehemiah in the twentieth of the same King, Nehem. 2. 1.

The Title.

Notemiah This is the title of the Book following, as our Translators have set it down. In hebrew, it carrieth onely this title, Nehrmiah. This title is given unto it, because Nehrmiah and his Acts, are the chieffubject of the Book. Some take him to be the Pen-man thereof, because he of fpeaketh of himself, in the first person; as chap. 1.1. I mat in Shushan; and vers. 2. I salved; vers. 4. I beard, I fated own; and so in singly other places: But another man might be the Pen-man of the Book, and yet bring him in speaking of himself, in the first person. Thus God himself is brought in, speaking in the first person, Gen. 6.17. & 9.9. So Jacob, Gen. 54, 30. And Reuben, Gen. 37. 30. The vulgar Latin, and our ancient English Translators; yea, and fundry others give it this title, The facout Book of Eldras, in reference to the former Book, called, Ezwa; for it is supposed that the same Ezwa wrote both these Books.

In just indignation, this holy man, fittred up with zeal of Gods glery, imprecates ven-geance, against proud, (coraful, implacable enemies of God and his Church. And these imprecations are rather for exemplary punishments upon them, then for their eternal condemnation. Yet I will not deny, but that the Prophets, by that divine Spirit wherewith they were affixed, might differn that divine Spirit wherewith they were attitled, might dicern fome particular persons to be reprobates, and utterly rejected of God. Imprecations of holy men, recorded in sacred Scriptures, are thatp, two-edged tools, not for every ones hand-Scriptures, are that p, two-edged tools, not for every ones hand-ling. When Chrifts Diciples would have commanded fire (as Elijah did, 2 King, 1.10.) to come down from heaven, to confume the Samaritans, he rebuked them, and faid, Ye know not of what spirit you are, Luke 9. 54, 55. Particular imprecations, against particular persons, are not for every fpirit; but for such extraordinary spirits as Prophets and Apostles had. Yet thus far may every faithful spiritteslifie his holy zeal in this kinde of imprecation, by an indeffinite extending it against such as are indeed mischievous, and irre-concileable enemies of the Church. Besides, though we may not make an imprecation against a particular person; yet against his mischievous practice we may. Imprecations, like to this of Nehemiah, are many in Scripture, as Jerem. 18.3.

to this of Nemenian, are many in Scipium, a spicium. 1875.

CHAP. XIII.

N that day The most immediate reference of this circumstance of time, is unto the day of dedicating the wall. The hiftory whereof is in the former chapter. This very phrase is used, chap. 12. 43. On that day they offered sacrifices; and on that day also, for the sanctitying of it, they might read the law. Others make a more remote reference; namely, to the reading of the law on their great day of fast, when the feed of Israel separated themfelves from all firangers, chap. 9.1, 2, &c. But the moft Ex-positors refer this to the time wherein Nehemiah returned the econd time to Jerulalem. See v.6,7. For this good governour was as careful of reforming abuses about religion, as about redrefting grievances in State. for ever ] This in the fulleft and largest extent thereof, is taken of such Ammonites and Moabites as are before noted. Besides, this extent of time, having relation to the law, is properly to be taken for fo long as the politic of the Jews remained, io long this continued to be a law. Yea further, in regard of the civil priviledges of Gods people, Aminonites and Moabites were never to be made partakers of them. They were never to be admitted into any place of authority or command; they were never to be enrolled or incorporated into the Common-wealth of Ifrael , as free-born Ifraelites; nor to have any inheritance among them. But if an Ammonite, or Moabite, or any other franger renounced their idolatry, professed the true religion, and were circumcifed, he might joyn with Gods people, in observing Gods holy ordinances, Exod. 12.48,49.

The Argument of the Book of Efther.

Very remarkable evidence of the Divine providence, is fet forth in this Book. The particular passages A Very remarkable condence of the Livinne provisions, 13 fee join in 100 2000, a not pursuant property thereof, are thefe: First, Ahalucrus, a great Ahanach, makes a sampsious Feath, sendath for the same of the mering, tuspe is and y, and f not or a county, examines merines when me fraction fraction to think to other side, thought it too little to execute his cruel rage on him, but sought to root out the whole face, of the Jews, chap. 3. Fourthly, Mordecal having notice of a conspiracy of the Kings Officers, to take away the King life, made it hunbur, and thereupon it was registered in their public secords: which the King on a might, when he could not sleep, studing recorded, advanced Mordecai in dignity and authority next to simplest, nggs, when we coust not steep, smang revoruses the comment would be adapted and authority next to simpless, chap 2. 21,22. and 6.1,86c. Fifthly, I be flow of Haman against Mordecal, and all the flows, being divided; Elther, after once and twice feasiting of the King and Haman together, so wrought upon the King, as be commanded Haman to be hanged upon the Gibber which be had prepared for Mordecal; and gave such theory to the Jews to defend themselves, and oppose their enemies, as the Jews escaped the danger intended against them, and their enemies were destroyed; yea, and all Hamans sons also, chap. 7.5, &cc. and 8. and 9. 1, &c. Sixthly, The means of obtaining this favour from the Lord, was fasting and prayer, chap. 4.16,17. Seventh-5, The effects following bereupon, were foleum rejoycing and thankefeit ing for the present; and an annual memorial thereof for the future; together, with that good which Motdecal surther did to the Cinecho God, chap.9.17, &c. The time of this history was about twenty years. For in the third year of Ahasuerus was the forementioned Feast, chap. 5.3. In his seventh year he married Queen Esther, chap. 2.16. In the twelfth Jorementumen coup, cutary, 32, and security to a market security of the country of year. Hamma plotted his mileherous plot against the lews, shap, 3:7. Now he reigned two and thenty years, and all his reign was Mordecai in high esteem, and sought the goad of his people, chap. 10. 3. There is in this book, an evidence of Gods over-ruling providence in many particulars; and earnest prayer, with fasting, was made to God, and solemn praise given unto God, and a yearly day of praise ordained: Tet throughout the whole Book not one tittle of God is once fet down. The like is not to be found in any other book of Scripture, Whether it be long, or foort.

Some take him to be Aftyages the grandfather of Cyrus, king of the Medes, who lived in the time that or Cyrus, any or the brees, who have in the tank cannot be the Jews remained captives in Babylon; but it cannot be imagined that a hundred and feven and twenty provinces should be under his juridiction, (the Babylonish Monarchy being then in the heighth of it )as were under this man. There is never a King of Persia after Cyrus, but some or other have taken him to be this Ahasucrus. The most probable opinion is, that he was that Monarch, whom the heathen historians call Xerkes; who was fon to that Darius, who succeeded the Magi, and married Cyrus his daughter. The wife of this man was, by heathen writers, named, Amestris, which may be taken from Effher: If to then, without all question, Xerxes was this Ahasuerus. but if we had been fold for bond-men, and bond momen] This had been a very great mifchief. For bond-fervants are at the pleafure of their lords; and that (as of old the custome was) even to take away their lives; yet that power was rarely used: and bond-servants by their good service, might win the favour of their lords; but now they were absolutely adiudged to death: and that all of them, without exception of any one, chap 3.13.

If they had been utterly deftroyed all this had been clean loft : and if they had been fervants. the king could not have had the benefit of their labours than would have redowned to their particular lords, whose bondfervants they were. She inferreth, that this damage to the king would have been fo great, that all which the adversary was worth, or could do would not be a fufficient recompence and that therefore the ten thousand talents of filver which he proffered, ch. 3.9. was not comparable to this damage.

By this effect following upon this vengeance on Haman, it is manifest, that the heart of Ahafuerus was utterly alienated from Haman: otherwife, though on a sudden he commanded him to be executed, he would have been disquieted in his minde for what he had done, and lansenged Hamans death. That God, who turned the heart of this King to Efther, (ch. 2.17.) and to Mordecai, (chap.6. 10.) now alienated it from Haman, and pacified his spirit, after execution was done upon Haman; that not only the affaires of the kingdom might the better go on; but also means for the preservation of the Church, and for the peace and prosperity thereof, better succeed.

Satan hath no legs to go to and fro, yet he removes from one tan harn no tegs to go to and tro, yet he removes from one place to another in a spiritual manner, as Angels do. He is sometimes in one place, sometimes in another: he is not every where like God, nor unmoveable like a tree, though he every where IRE God, nor unmoveaue like a tree, though ne cannot go as men do. Herein is deferibed the nature of Sa-tan, who is ever ranging for his prey, as one unquiet, feeking always to do mifchief. Yet Satan did not intend fo much in this phrase, for he would not accuse himself to God, but he sought to keep himself from giving account of the hurt he had done; as if he had faid, I have been doing no harm, onely I have walked up and down in the world, which is permitted to me ; like Gehazi his excuse , Thy fervant went no whither ,
